COVID-19 UPDATE (06/11/20):

- As of June 11, 45 out of 50 states have officially let their stay-at-home orders expire indefinitely. Because most of them are still in Phase 1 or Phase 2 of reopening, all residents are still recommended to limit non-essential travel, practice social distancing, and take any necessary safety precautions.
- Georgia is the only state to have specifically instructed only vulnerable populations (the elderly, the immunocompromised, those at high-risk of being exposed to COVID-19) to remain at home.
- The remaining 4 states have somewhat modified their stay-at-home policies to account for the reopening of some businesses. Residents of these states are still urged to stay at home – traveling is only authorized when visiting essential businesses or businesses that have been authorized to resume, depending on the state's recovery phases. These states are California, Hawaii, Vermont, and New Hampshire.
